Course Presentation

Bariatric and metabolic surgery has become a prominent subspeciality among general surgeons and has proved its safety, efficacy, and durability for the treatment of severe to moderate obesity and its comorbidities worldwide.

However, this speciality necessitates years of committed training in experienced centers to yield optimal outcomes. Surgical complications can occur due to a lack of standardization in global education and training. Globally, training and education options in the bariatric and metabolic surgery field are highly variable, and expectations and resources differ among young surgeons¹

This international experts' survey performed by Young-IFSO including 240 respondents from 61 countries, underlines the lack of a standardized global surgical curriculum of bariatric and metabolic surgery during residency.

Therefore, the aim of this Animal Lab is to advance surgical education with a mentor-trainee system and to supervise young surgeons regarding the primary and metabolic surgeries Endosleeve-Sleeve-RYGB-OAGB.

We will pass on the surgical tips and tricks and the expert corner with important Italian surgeons will be an opportunity to learn and get inspired face by face. Since scientific work is of most importance, this practical course will finish with a scientific part to motivate all young surgeons in performing it.
